

Working Holiday Maker Reform Package: Factsheet

Working holiday makers are important to Australia's economy

The Government recognises that working holiday makers are an important source of labour in Australia, particularly in sectors that rely on seasonal employment.

Fulfilling the Turnbull Government's election commitment to review the supply and taxation of working holiday makers, the Government has delivered a package of reforms to meet seasonal labour supply needs and keep Australia as a top destination for working holiday makers.

The final package includes the following key elements:

- introduce, from 1 January 2017, a 15 per cent tax rate on all working holiday makers from the first dollar of income up to $37,000, with ordinary marginal rates applying from $37,001;
- increase the maximum age for working holiday makers to 35;
- provide $10 million in additional funding for Tourism Australia for a global youth-targeted marketing campaign;
- provide an additional $10 million funding to the Australian Taxation Office (ATO) and the Fair Work Ombudsman (FWO) to establish the employer register and assist with ongoing compliance initiatives and to address workplace exploitation of working holiday makers;
- commence a Seasonal Workers Incentive Trial to increase the number of Australian job seekers undertaking horticultural seasonal work; and
- allow working holiday makers to stay with one employer for up to 12 months, as long as the second six months is worked in a different region.

Acting now to deliver benefits

The Government has secured passage of the legislation through Parliament and the new tax rate will take effect from 1 January 2017. This provides much needed certainty to employers and working holiday makers.

- The ATO has further information for working holiday makers about the new tax arrangements on its website, available at: <https://www.ato.gov.au/Individuals/International-tax-for-individuals/Coming-to-Australia/Working-holiday-makers/>

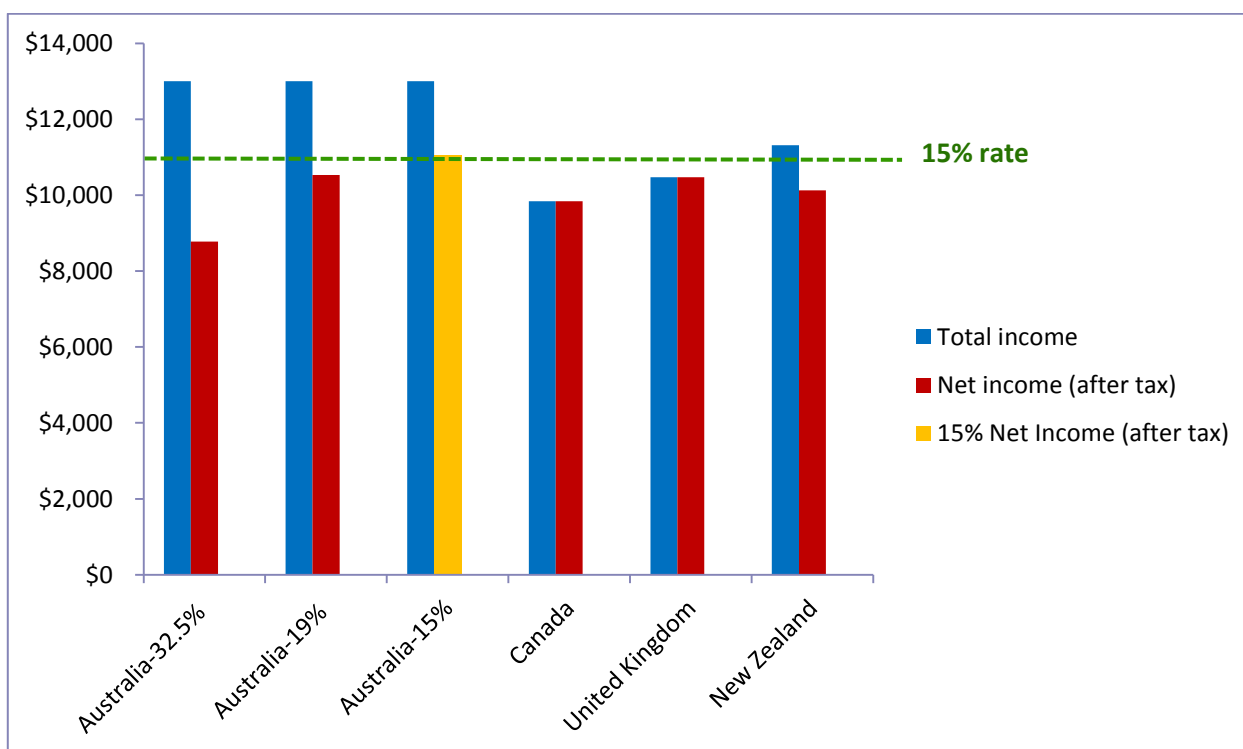

The package will provide significant benefits for both the agriculture and tourism sectors. Both sectors will benefit from the changes to encourage working holiday makers to visit Australia.

Importantly, the lower tax rate will ensure that Australia remains a key destination for working holiday makers. Further, allowing working holiday makers to stay with one employer for 12 months (with the second six months worked in a different region) will allow employers to receive greater returns from investment in training working holiday makers.

The new tax rate is internationally competitive

A 15 per cent rate from the first dollar of income up to $37,000 is internationally competitive in terms of after tax income. As Figure 1 below shows, even after taking into account cost of living differences, with a 15 per cent rate after tax incomes for an average working holiday maker in Australia are significantly higher compared to key working holiday maker destinations, such as New Zealand, the United Kingdom and Canada.

Registration and reporting

The Government is aware of concerns about exploitation of working holiday makers. To help address this, employers of working holiday makers will need to register with the ATO so that they can withhold tax at the 15 per cent rate. This registration process will be simple and easy.

Employers of working holiday makers will only need to register once. Employers who register will be able to withhold at the 15 per cent rate. Unregistered employers will need to withhold at 32.5 per cent and may be subject to ATO penalties. The register will provide valuable data on who employs working holiday makers, what sectors they are engaged in and where the employers are located (see Table 1 below).

- The ATO has further information for employers of working holiday makers on its website, available at: <https://www.ato.gov.au/Business/Your-workers/Employers-of-working-holiday-makers/>

Budget offsets

To help offset the Budget impact of these changes, the Government will:

- increase the tax on working holiday makers' superannuation when they leave Australia to 65 per cent from 1 July 2017, which is consistent with the objective of superannuation to support Australians in their retirement, not to provide additional funds for working holiday makers when they leave Australia; and
- increase the Passenger Movement Charge by a small amount of $5 from 1 July 2017, including a commitment to not increase the rate for five years from this date.

The new rate of tax on the departing Australia superannuation payment only applies to people in Australia on a visa subclass 417 (Working Holiday) or 462 (Work and Holiday). It applies to payments made on or after 1 July 2017.
